The programme of the new Empire Re-

As for the latter measures which have been adopted by the point, the British public must look the Admiralty, and its satisfaction that everyfacts squarely in the face. State Socialism has come to us in the train of the present war, and it has come to stay. Already we have State control of mines, of railways, of agriculture, and of other vital industries. The problem which brought some of our chief Imperial thinkers, including Viscount Milner, into conference is the enormous increase in the National Debt and its vast burden on the portant part. The interests of neutrals taxpayer. If our war debt is to be paid must be taken into consideration in any by taxation alone, we must face an annual Budget of at least five hundred millions after the war. The prospect is so formidable that it imposes on democratic finance the necessity of developing some new idea.

It will not interfere at all with Norwegian and Swedish foreign trade, or with A new idea is now offered to us by this new Committee-namely, the development of the Empire's resources by the Empire for the benefit of Imperial revenue. The State put four millions into the Suez Canal' Company, and it is now worth forty mil-The Committee proposes on a huge scale by a Board for the Con-

It is believed that the value of those lands would speedily reach £20 an acre, so that parts of the Empire. A particularly fruitful field would be tropical and subtropical Africa, including, it is to be hoped, the great possessions which we have wrested, or are wresting, from the sway of Germany. Millions of natites would earn good wages under such Imperial schemes. They would become good customers for British produce, and so would stimulate British industry at home. Another vast domain of profit for the State presents itself in the fisheries of the Empire. It is estimated that, if our whale fisheries were put under a unified control at least one million pounds a year would accrue to the national revenue, and that industry, with the latest refrigerating plant in every town of the Empire, would bring in fifty millions a year. The men training ground for the Navy. The crease in our mercantile marine losses. Development Committee, not content with these far flung projects, would extend the State's interest to the region of municipal enterprise. Its plans contemplate State revenue from the provision of public facilities, such as electric power, and from the distribution of certain articles of food. The profits from all these undertakings, large and small, would be devoted to the payment of interest on the National Debt. There would be "unearned increment," too, from which ultimately the whole Debt would be repaid. We may gasp at this mighty project, but, if we admit that State Socialism has come to stay, and that, if the Empire is not to be crushed by taxation, a new way must be found to pay old debts, we shall be forced to realise that this scheme, or something very like it, is a possibility of the and Imperial finance. Their solution is bold because the problem is grave and urgent. Mr. Frewen, with his starting and startling idea of a great "Empire Farm," may live to be hailed as the Columbus of a new world of Imperial economics. Few will dare to say that the scheme is not practicable—it is chiefly a matter of energy, good management, and Imperial co-operation. There is always the danger that the State's direct control of the labour of hundreds of millions of white and black citizens of the Empire might develop into tyranny; but an Imperial democracy might be trusted to be vigilant against the bugbear of a servile State." On the other hand, the scheme's advantages are obvious. It would give us not only a strengthened, consolidated, and vastly enriched Empire and release from a crushing burden of debt, but a general improvement of wages and of the standards of social life. It has, we may note, great possibilities for this country Ireland is a land of great natural re sources which have hardly begun to be developed. In recent letters correspondents have lamented the rapid decay of our salmon fisheries. A great store of wealth lies hidden in our peat bogs. The driving power of innumerable industries rushes unused, to the sea in our lordly rivers. A Board for the Conservation and Development of the Resources of the Empire would not neglect such possibilities beside the very seat of Empire. It might becomeperhaps, Mr. Frewen and Sir Horace Plunkett are inspired by this hope-a Board for the Conservation and Develop-

It could leave the development to individuals taking a royalty assume, therefore, that Denmark, the neutral country chiefly concerned, accepts the necessity of the new measures, velopment to individuals taking a royalty

It could do its own development with its own capital and its own servants; or the work could be done by chartered companies under the control of the State. The sesult in all these cases would be the same—a great development of Imperial resources and a new fount of financial supply. The Committee which has carried the idea to its present stage includes the names of Lords Desborough, Grey, Duntaven, and Selborne, Sir Horace Plunkett, Sir Starr Jameson, Mr. Moreton Frewen, and Mr. Rudyard Kipling.

The new Committee owes its first big project to an Irishman. Indeed, the whole scheme originated with Mr. Frewen's proposal of "an Empire Farm" in Canada. A description of this proposal will illustrate the audacity and purpose of the plan of which would be only a single detail. It is suggested that an Imperial Development with its own capital and results of the superior proposal of the policy of mining has probably been adopted by the Admiralty not altogether without reluctance. Mine-laying, a form of warfare scarcely defensive purposes in the immediate vicinity of harbours, is not a policy defensive purposes in the immediate vicinity of harbours, is not a policy of mining has probably been adopted by the Admiralty not altogether without reluctance. Mine-laying, a form of warfare scarcely defensive purposes in the immediate vicinity of harbours, is not a policy of the superior naval Power. It tends to limit both the enemy's power of egress from their ports and the freedom of purpose of the plan of which it would be only a single detail. It is suggested that an Imperial Development with the Committee of the most vigorous anti-submarine tactics the most vigorous anti-submarine tactics and proposed the most vigorous anti-submarine tactics and proposed to the enemy's coasts. For that the policy of their and that our Government has been able to adopted the mana been able to dopt them with a single eye to their may be any means confined to Unionists, was expressed to-day wi the most vigorous anti-submarine tactics associated with Mr. Walter Long during close to the enemy's coasts. England would pay this Navy. The disadvantages of that limitasum at the rate of £10,000,000 a year, and tien, however, have to be balanced against the advantages of restricting the areas through which the enemy's submarines can reach the outer seas. It is becoming more and more apparent that measures for the Empire might expect to receive in combating the submarine campaign must be cash a sum almost, if not quite, equal to directed chiefly to preventing the exit of the amount of its whole war debt. Similar the raiders, or intercepting them on their developments might be undertaken in all return if they succeed in reaching the trade routes. The conditions of the new campaign are wholly different from those of the old. It was a question formerly of dealing with types of submarines which could not operate far from their bases, and were compelled to return to those bases very frequently. The latest types, once they leave port, have a very wide range of action, and are under no necessity to return to port for weeks together. In the outer seas they cannot be effectively. combated, except possibly by the convoying of all merchantmen-a policy which, for a variety of reasons, including the uneconomic employment of tonnage involved, it is undesirable to adopt if it can be an Imperial monopoly of the whole fishing avoided. Effectual measures must be preventive; they must aim at making it, if not impossible, at least perilous, for the enemy's submarines to attempt to reach who did the fishing would receive good the open sea. We may hope to see the new wages as servants of the State, and the Board of Admiralty's policy of "stopping whole scheme would furnish a splendid the earths" justified by a substantial de-

County Court Reform. A deputation from the Dublin Chamber of Commerce yesterday acquainted Mr. Duke with the case for reform of Irish bankruptcy and county court procedure. This matter has been brought to the attention of successive Chief Secretaries for many years past, but the case for early 1913, a conference in Dublin of representatives of all the Chambers of Commerce in Ireland and of various mercantile associations declared that "legislation is imperatively necessary for the security and land) Bili as prepared by the Incorporated Law Society, and the amendments to the existing law which had been suggested, a little while before, by the report of the County Court Judges to the Lord Chancellor. The reform ought to have been accomplished long before war disorganised the whole Parliamentary programme. We think that the business community in Ireland-in the widest sense, for the proposed reforms are desired by small traders at least as much as by large firms-is entitled to complain at the remissness of the Executive. The Dublin Chamber of Commerce-which, as Mr. Duke should recognise, is acting in this matter for the whole business community—has done well to acquaint him with the facts at an early stage of his period of tenure of the Chief Secretary's office. He knows now the position, and can have no excuse for neglect of the first proper moment that occurs for the effecting of the desired reforms. We may add that the demand for the appointment of a Public Trustee for Ireland is hardly less cogent and

For months past it has been known that Germany has tried to seduce one or other of the parties to the Entente to break away by offering a slice of territory belonging to some other member of the Central Powers' Alliance. It is now said that information has been given to diplomatic circles in Switzerland as to these offers. To Russia was offered the Dardanelles and Constantineple, and, since that offer was not accepted, an offer of Galicia and the Bukowina followed. Italy was offered a considerable portion of South Austrian territory, while offers of Austrian territory were also made to Rumania to induce her to maintain her neutrality. The extraordinary thing about these offers is that Germany seems to be in a position to offer the lands of her Allies as she pleases. Germany seems to be in a position to offer the lands of her Allies as she pleases. Probably, if they would not yield them up, Germany would take them by force to hand them over to the enemy.

A Geneva newspaper states to-day that prepared to give way on the question of Belgium, and offer necessary guarantees. It is the question of Germany's industrial and commercial future that is causing anxiety, and the threat of the Allies to have no dealings with her in the future disturbs the German Government more than anything else. The paper says that Germany is prepared, in order to avoid such a boycott, to make large concessions, even in regard to Alsace-Lorraine.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL WALTER LONG KILLED.

A BRILLIANT CABEER.

News was received at Rood Ashton, Bath yesterday, that Brigadier-General Walter Long. C.M.G., eldest son of the Right Hon. Walter Long, had been killed in action. The deceased officer, who served in the Scots Greys in the South African campaign, and received the D.S.O., had served with conspicuous ability in the present war, being mentioned more than once in despatches. In this month's Honours, he received a Brevet Lieutenant-Colonelcy.

Lord Milner was one of the original members, until his entry into the Cabinet compelled him to resign.

This afternoon a number of journalists attended a meeting held at the offices of the Rhodes Trust in Seymour House, Waterloo place, and heard some very interesting addresses from Sir Leander Jameson, Mr. Bigland, M.P., and Mr. Wilson Fox, outlining the methods by which some of the objects of the Empire Resources Development Committee might be carried out. There was a free interchange of views among those present, and one came away with the feeling that here, at any rate, was the germ of a movement which might in a very few years more than restore the ravages made by the war upon our national capital, and raise the British Empire to an even greater height of prosperity than it had achieved before August, 1914.

ROLL OF HONOUR | LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

THE TILLAGE CAMPAIGN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

Six.—There is a point concerning compulsory tillage that wants clearing up badly. The Regulation requires that all occupiers of holdings of ten acres or over must cultivate in 1917 one-tenth of the arable land of their holdings, in addition to whatever amount they cultivated last year, subject to the provision that no one is obliged to till more than 50 percent. of the arable part of his holding. Land under first and second year rye grass will be held to be cultivated, and thus will count as part of the previous year's quantum of tillage, etc.; orchards will be regarded as cultivated.

Do the crops, such as wheat, winter oats, rye, etc., sown in 1916, but to be harvested in 1917, count as cultivated land of 1916? For example, take a 300-acre arable farm:—

30 acres rye grass. 30-acres rye grass. THE TILLAGE CAMPAIGN.

1915
30 acres rye grass. 30 acres rye grass.
20 ,, wheat.
20 ,, winter oats. rye orchard

We have 120 acres to be tilled in 1917, plus 30 acres, one-teuth of 300=150 acres. If so, this farmer will have to harvest in 1917 not only 120 acres, but 120+120+30=270 acres. Surely at least the crops to be harvested in 1917 should count as tillage of that year? You cannot expect farmers to tackle the job until everything is made quite clear to them. Very few of them seem to know even what the penalty under the Defence of the Realm Act amounts to, and many of them think that they need not bother until the 25th March, 1917.—Yours, etc.,

January 29th, 1917.

January 29th, 1917.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES. SIR,—The practical effect of the Tillage Reghtations seems to be that those who hitherto have cultivated (as defined in the Regulations) about 25 per eent. of their arable land in rotation, in accordance with accepted practice, now find at the eleventh hour, in an exceptionally severe season, that they have to treble their lea break, which will give a pleasant autumn outlook of unmanured stubbles. Is it reasonable to suppose that the tillage farmer has hitherto kept his horses and implements idle for a considerable portion of their time in favourable weather? There is a large number of land-holders whose capital resources are very limited, and, as the outlay for tillage equipment is a very serious item, what inducement for contracting a loan is offered by a guarantee of a "fixed" price for only one year, based, moreover, on a sample of corn unknown in this country? There will be a pleasant prospect before them if, having "compulsorily" borrowed to start on their new career, they find themselves badly let in owing to the peculiarities of this climate. find themselves badly let in owing to the peculiarities of this climate.

So much for those whose reply to these Regulations may be: "I would like to do all I can, but I cannot." How about those whose answer is, "I will not "? There are, undoubtedly, many of the "cannot "class, and, in view of the feeling that exists in parts of the country, it is not unreasonable to suppose that the enforcement of the Regulations will in due course become a live issue. It is understood that a heavy fine is to be one of the penalties. The other penalty, it is understood, is to be the transfer of the tillage section to some person or persons who will carry out the Regulations. What a grand prospect of impartial justice at once opens itself before us! How delightfully simple it will be to put into practice with the "will note!" How very pleasant will be the position of the choavious ranchers and others who may have fallen short of the Regulation standard, and how very safe ranchers and others who may have fallen short of the Regulation standard, and how very safe will be the position of the rank and file of the agricultural community!

I write in no carping spirit, but as a loyal man, and I will venture to say that all the decent, hard-working sections of the agricultural community will rise to their country's needs, to the best of their ability, without any penaltica being threatened. It will, however, be very interesting to see, when the time comes, what steps will be taken against the "will nots" to enforce these well-considered and thoroughly practical Regulations.—Yours, etc., Gzorge C. Townsend.

Cordangan Manor, Tipperary, January 27th, 1917.

January 27th, 1917. TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES. Sir.—With regard to the present tillage scheme, in my opinion there are only two real dangers to its success—namely, the lateness of the date before which tillage must commence, and the fact that the Department does not seem to have taken steps to make the purchase of

POSITION IN COUNTY MEATH.

Addressing a specially-convened meeting of the Meath County Committee of Agriculture, in Navan yesterday, Colonel Sir N. T. Everard, Bart., said that there were two classes of men whom he found were most opposed to carry out the recommendations of the Department. First, those who had never tilled their land, and who, rather than make an effort to do so, said they would sconer go to jail. There were others who had already tilled a large proportion of their land, and who said, very soundly and reasonably, that they had done as much as they could, and it was those who had done nothing that should be required to carry out this increase in tillage. The main point, which he hoped everybody would understand, was that if we are to save the country from the horrors of a famine it was necessary that one-tenth of the arable area of the country must be tilled. The opportunity, he was sorry to say, had been seized for an endesvour to force on the back to the land movement. He was not going to express any opinion on the advantages of placing the pecule on the land. But they had POSITION IN COUNTY MEATH. to express any opinion on the advantages of placing the people on the land. But they had to consider the facts as they were. They had only about six or seven weeks in which time they would have to comply with the requirements of the occasion—that was to say, to put one million acres under cultivation. Personally, he thought that everybody should do his
